American Note Expressing Highly Conditional Willingness to Receive Britain's Offered Partial War-debt Payment Sent to London Government

WASHINGTON, June 14.—President Roosevelt today received a $100,000 payment by Great Britain, as an "acknowledgment of the (war) debt pending final settlement."

Great Britain in her note asked for a review of her debt agreement and Mr. Roosevelt suggested that she send representatives to Washington to discuss this "as soon as convenient."

He informed Great Britain that he had no power to reduce the level of the British debt and would submit any results from the negotiations to Congress for its information and action.

PROBE URGED IN DEATH OF FARM WIFE

Coroner's Jury Brings Open Verdict—Woman Found in Embers

DRUMHELLER, June 14.—Further investigations into the death of Mrs. Annie Nazary, separated wife of Peter Nazary, whose body was found in the burnt ashes of a barn on her farm eleven miles southeast of Rosedale, on the morning of May 12, by her eleven-year-old son, Edward, a coroner's jury brought in an open verdict Tuesday afternoon after hearing from the husband and son of the deceased woman a story of the woman's promiscuous life with other men and her fear of her husband, since the fire has not been given a simple testimony.

Giving his simple testimony, Peter Nazary swore that he had been separated from his wife for the past eighteen months. He last saw the woman alive three weeks before her death when he went to the farm to get a wagon. At that time he had asked witness to kill her as her life was no good.

MURDER EXPRESSES YEAR
Eleven-year-old Edward, in his evidence, stated that his mother had expressed fear of Joe Potolinski, who one week before the tragedy, had spent a night at the farm. On many occasions Joe had come to the barn and on these occasions Mrs. Nazary had been afraid to go to the barn alone. The boy testified that his mother had told him that "Joe had threatened to beat her up."

The boy told of other men coming to the farm and staying for one or more days. On the night of the fire he had attended to chores in the barn at nine o'clock, going to bed two hours later. Before going to bed he had looked just before he retired and his mother went into the doors but returned two minutes later reporting that nothing was wrong.

When he awoke at 6:30 the next morning he found the barn on fire. His mother was missing. He saw the smoking ruins of the barn but remained at the door until eight o'clock, believing that his mother had gone to a neighbor's for help.

When he finally walked to the blackened mass of lumber and debris, he saw the torso of a charred body which, upon closer investigation he believed was his mother.

TRIED TO TRACE MAN
Constable Jack Reddick made five calls to investigate the disappearance of the woman. He found that the woman had been made to trace Potolinski, the man who had been seen at the farm. The arms and legs of the dead woman were detached from the body when police arrived at the scene of the tragedy. It was impossible to identify the body but a few fragments of personal belongings, including a watch, were found near the body.

The body was found in a position that led the jury to believe that it was that of Mrs. Nazary, who conducted the post mortem, testified that her findings were negative, no signs of fracture or other wound could be found.

The body was found in a position that led the jury to believe that it was that of Mrs. Nazary, who conducted the post mortem, testified that her findings were negative, no signs of fracture or other wound could be found.

The right jugular vein was severed but it was impossible to state whether this had been cut. The state witness stated that the body was due to burns, suffocation or from other cause.

After about an hour's deliberation the jury, composed of J. S. Branson, J. Weber, H. C. Farthing, H. D. Shear, J. Wei, brought in the verdict as stated above. Dr. C. M. MacLachlan, coroner, presided over the jury after four previous adjournments, occupied five hours.

Ontario Liberal Leader Will Not Face Conservative

TORONTO, June 14.—W. E. N. Sinclair, K.C., Liberal leader in the Ontario legislature, will not, it is reported, face Conservative party opposition in his bid to become premier in the next provincial election. The Mail and Empire said today that Mr. Sinclair's willingness during the last legislative session to cooperate with the government to renege on the Conservative promise to hold a referendum on the subject of the province's name, had caused the Conservative party to press the belief of late that Mr. Sinclair should have an ultimatum.

The rumored intention of the government to give Mr. Sinclair a clear field in the next election, the Mail said today, had caused the Conservative party to press the belief of late that Mr. Sinclair should have an ultimatum.

Sinclair's Letter to His Son

BY GORDON SINCLAIR

Gordon Sinclair and his two sons, Donald and RIGHT, Gordon

MY Dear Gordon: Now you are five years old, son, and you are going to start to school. Lucky boy. I hope I'm there to take you down and start you off on the long road of trying to find out what it's all about. We might as well start right now on a geography lesson.

On the map you'll find a long green finger pointing down from Asia to the South Seas. That's Singapore, exactly halfway around the world from Canada. That's where I am now, Gord, and it's all wacky and hot and the bathroom when the furnace has been too busy and you're running off the steam.

I've come up from the black jungle lands of the South Seas where little boys of five don't go to school at all. In fact, they never go to school or to the movies. They never see a train or an automobile because there are none. And they eat ants.

One day New Guinea I was walking through the jungle with some boys when we came to a pile of dirt higher than themselves. It was red dirt full of holes like a sponge. The boys took sticks and knocked it all down. Inside were thousands of big red ants and the boys scooped them up by the double handful the way you'd scoop up hickberries. They ate them faster than you'd eat peanuts or popcorn.

There are white ants in New Guinea, too. They call them army ants because they march across the hills and fields eating living soldiers and ruin everything in their path. One day I saw army ants catch a mother rat that was running. They were in just a few minutes while I watched they ate them all up and then moved on. Only the bones of the mother rat were left and there weren't even bones of the little ones.

A man who stopped in the same tin hut as we left his suitcase on the floor. He had shirts and socks and suits in there. Bolas, too, and a camera. The army ants came by the thousand and ate everything to pieces. The whole suitcase was gone except for the frame and hinges, which were brass. They ate the leather off his camera, the cotton part off his boots and his pocketbook. But in his pocketbook was a letter of credit and the ants didn't eat that. They don't like paper.

Sometimes army ants will eat up the furniture, and carpets are never safe. They won't eat teakwood at all, and that's pretty lucky because teak grows in this part of the world, so people make their furniture from it. But furniture like we have is eaten to pieces if the ants get at it. To keep them out, white folks build their houses out of stilts. Around the top part of the stilts they put big coils of wire and the ants can't get over that, and that keeps the ants out because they can't swim.

You always have to sleep here under a big net, and the feet of your bed are in jars of water. Sometimes this is very bad because you forget to change the water and mosquitoes lay eggs there and hatch out more mosquitoes. These mosquitoes bite you when they were like the mosquitoes we have in Canada, but they are thirty little even brutes called Anopheles—Anoles for short—and when they bite you they lay a different kind of bug's eggs right in your blood. Malaria bugs. When these hatch out you get a terrible fever and shiver all over. You might think a fever makes you very hot and weak, but instead you shiver like a leaf and your teeth chatter like castanets. Then, if you don't get medicine the fever grows worse and you die.

When you do that in New Guinea they put you away up in a tree. One day when I was walking through the jungle I saw thirteen people up in trees with other people sitting underneath to watch the bodies. One reason they watched was to stop other people from coming along, taking the bodies down and eating them. That's pretty awful, eh, Gord?

But people in New Guinea eat other people pretty often. They cook some of them in stone pots with onions, sweet potatoes and yams. That makes a stew. But others are baked under the ground. First they are tied up in leaves, but that isn't a very nice thing to think about, and they won't ever eat that. A jungle, Gord, is a very different place to what most people think. It does have big trees at all. Just low squat ones all overgrown with vines and ferns and sweet peas. The flowers that grow in a jungle are so beautiful they bring a lot of money in a Canadian city. There are sweet peas bigger than a man's two fists put together and orchids in all the glorious colors you can think up. There are camellias, too, and gardenias and other flowers like that.

There is mistletoe by the mile, but you can't meet any nice girls under the mistletoe because there are only black ones with nasty pictures painted all over their faces, shark's teeth driven through their noses and lumps of bone hanging from their ears. Some day you'll be meeting a nice girl under the mistletoe and kissing her. She'll pretend at first to be surprised or not to like it or something, but that's just the silly way girls act. You'll learn. But the Guinea girls would drive a knife into you if you tried to kiss them. They'd think you were eating them or something.

One day some Guinea boys and I found a cuscus up a tree. He was a little reddish cuscus and the boys pulled themselves straight up the tree by the mistletoe vines and brought him down. A cuscus is like a kangaroo, only he climbs trees. He has a big nasty tail and when he swings that around you better look out. But he doesn't bite and when you find him up a tree he can't run away very fast. These boys built a cage for their cuscus and kept him. When he gets bigger they'll make stew from him.

You see, the people in this part of the world are all great meat eaters. They don't like vegetables at all. Always spit out potatoes and carrots like you do spinach. But they like big chunks of meat, often dog, and eat it raw. Anything that is meat they eat. Rat, and mice and flying foxes, of which there are millions.

One day I visited a Catholic mission where there had been two nuns teaching little girls. The nuns had been shot at by arrows one night, but the archer missed them. One day they got terribly sick and the doctor said they had been poisoned by a snake and said the poison had been drained from a snake and put into their food. The nuns had to be hurried away to Australia in a ship. They were gone when I got to the mission, but the people who remained were on the lookout for more monkey business. One day there was great commotion and another snake rose right out of the elephant grass and pounced at the only nun who was left. She was wearing a long gray skirt. The snake hit into but didn't bite the sister. She took a big flower pot and bonked the snake till it crumpled up. Pretty soon afterwards a chap who was a grass cutter and handyman around the place came to ask if he could have the snake to make his dinner from.

I guess when you get travelling around the world you'll see a lot of things like this. I was quicker and easier, Gord. Just now with most of the ships laying up in harbor you have to wait weeks and weeks to get anywhere. I remember the day I got into Vancouver last year standing at a corner and staring at many white ladies in a half year. This time it's the very same. And you get awfully tired crooked narrow streets and alleys seething with brown bodies. And you get tired paying 15 cents every time you have a glass of water. You don't know how lucky you are being able to drink water straight out of the tap, Gord. Cold water, too.

Singapore, where I am now, is an island and every time an automobile tire gets a puncture or a blowout the people here are glad because they grow the rubber that tires are made from.

Across a smooth river, where you can sometimes see sharks swimming, is a different country called Jahore. There are tigers in Jahore and last night a tiger almost killed a man who was trying to take the tiger's picture.

He had a wire strung across a path where he thought the tiger would come and he was hiding behind the wire with a gun already to shoot if the tiger jumped at him. There was a camera set so that when the tiger jumped into the wire he'd light a flash and snap the camera at the same time. Then, if everything worked right, the man would have a picture of himself and the tiger both flashed and he was dazzled. But just as soon as the light went out the tiger leaped at the man and tore his arm right off. There were some other men all ready to shoot, but they were afraid of shooting their boss, so the tiger got away in the dark. Then to make it worse the picture, when it turned out, showed the tiger all right but not the man.

Lots of people think tigers can climb trees, Gord, but they can't. Tigers can swim but they can't climb trees. Across the channel here is Sumatra, and up in that long thin finger of land is Malaya. There are lots of tigers in those places. More tigers and English rubber people have gone back home and the tigers have crowded into the plantations and sometimes right into the villages. Another thing that makes the tigers bad now is the heavy license fee to go shooting them. Men can afford to pay $75 to shoot a tiger now, so there are more and more tigers, fewer and fewer hunters. Tigers, as I say, can't climb trees, but they are good swimmers. There are some dandy little bears here called honey bears because they like sweet things like candies. They are black with a golden horseshoe right on their chests and used to cost $50. Now, though, you can buy a golden honey bear for $5, but they sometimes turn out to be nasty, and claw people who hold them. A dog is much more fun than a honey bear.

I hope when I am coming home, Gord, that you will come to meet me because I have missed you very much. It has been ten weeks since I came away and nobody has sent me a letter. Not even a postcard, and you know it doesn't cost much to send a postcard.

When I was a little bigger than you, Gord, I used to prop myself up in bed, get a big hunk of bread and brown sugar and read exciting stories about "Sindul Singapore, the Cesspool of the East." That's just a funny story, Gord. Singapore isn't sinful at all. It's just a twisted confusion of lights and smells and voices that seem to come from nowhere. They have thin little men here to pull you around instead of ponies, and solitary white men with faraway looks in their eyes when they think of the boys like you. Sometimes these white men are thinking of their own little boys away off in the meadows of England or the hills of Germany, but usually they are thinking of the little boys that they once were themselves, or the little boys they would like to have. Usually they haven't got any little boys or any like your mother to look after the supper and sew on their buttons. That's because there are three white men for every little boy here and the ones at home want to come out. So instead of sinful and all that, Singapore, for the white men, is just a very lonely, lonely place where nobody would risk right down to the bottom of their trunks because they hope to be getting somewhere else pretty soon, and unpacking right to the very bottom seems so permanent.

People think, you know, that Singapore is awfully hot with water and bare where soldiers and sailors go on a spree and fight and make love. They're wrong. Singapore is a poor hasn't a single soldier bar along its waterfront or anywhere else. There is only one little dance hall and that closes at 12 o'clock.

When you're out in Singapore after midnight you feel like walking on tip toes so that you won't wake the hundreds of people who haven't any homes but sleep sprawled all over the sidewalks. Some of them are born on the sidewalks and live there all their lives. Before I say good-by to this home, Gord, I have to tell you about the snake stones. One day I was walking towards the Fort Morely hospital, which is perched on stilts beneath a broad green hill, when three boys who were ahead of me screamed out, "Snake! Snake! Snake! Take heed, Tabada. Take heed, Tabada." They had stopped yelling a snake greater than grass and thinner than a fountain pen had snapped out from a low bush and bitten one of the boys on the arm. He looked like the sort of snake you might see any old place. Not like a dangerous one. But let was dangerous. He left only two tiny little marks on the arm. Marks like the periods which separate these sentences.

I told the boys to hurry down to the hospital period on tip toes. Told them not even to wait to find the snake. But the boy who had been bitten didn't do this. Instead he took two little stones from a leather bag hung around his middle, touched the stones to his skin near the tiny wounds and then sat down in the grass. The stones hung on like blood suckers. You could hardly pull them off no matter how you tried. Soon the boy's arm began to swell. It turned blacker, too. He was a black boy to start with, but his arm became even blacker. The stones hung to his arm about twenty minutes, then one fell off. Pretty soon the other got wobbly, looked up and fell. The boy came on with us to the hospital. One of the native nurses there looked at the swollen arm, but didn't even put a bandage on it. She said the stones, which were about the size and shape of chestnuts, had absorbed every bit of poison. They had just sucked and sucked, and when the poison was out of the arm the stones fell off. Now let's tell the story useful sort of stone to have?

Sure, it, and I've got a pair. I'll bring them home for you, Gord. And I'll write you again soon.

I hope you get a pretty teacher, Gord, and one who knows a lot about geography. Best of Luck. DAD

FORGOTTEN PATIENTS

THE chronic invalid is the forgotten patient.

Hospitals are interested mainly in the patient who can be cured and discharged in a short time. But chronic diseases are the most common of all. The chronic patient is the forgotten patient of the hospital.

"Any institution for the care of the chronic sick must be prepared to retain patients until all medical means have been exhausted in their behalf, and longer, if the patient still requires medical observation. Chronic illnesses are by definition prolonged illnesses, and instead of the average stay of a few days, the chronic patient may remain in the hospital weeks, months and even years. The diagnosis of incurability should never be made by one scientist in the presence of another."

"The custodial care received now by many of the patients in homes for the aged and 'incurable' where many of the chronically ill are institutionalized, is not adequate for the large group of chronic sick. Patients of all ages and from all walks of life are in the chronic sick in the hands of men and women who receive care in accordance with his special needs."

Chronic disease is a definite and specific branch of medicine which offers a greater challenge to the medical scientific world than any other branch of medicine.

"The patient in the acute hospital is a medical problem only during his average stay of two weeks. In a chronic hospital chronic disease is not only a complex medical problem, it is a difficult social and economic problem as well."

Patients suffering from chronic diseases are a rule, of little interest to the majority of physicians, but chronic disease affords unusual opportunity for study, because patients are under observation over longer periods. It is important, therefore, Dr. Hinchman says, that the care of the chronic sick be in the hands of men and women who will have more than a passing interest in the chronic patient.

"In another branch of the service, nursing, the problems of selection and organization are equally difficult. Today the chronic patient is the neglected patient of the hospital. It is the neglect of nursing, and that statement is in my opinion, the last word to be kept in mind in this phase of nursing service."

"ONCE religious cant was the enemy; it was its religious cant. Today religious economic cant." —Hawley

Short Shots at Celebrities

THE new president of Harvard University, James Conant, is a renowned chemist, but he also once was great game as a swimmer. Fully clothed, he jumped into the Charles river to rescue a would-be suicide. But it's not thought that in honor of the new president Harvard will drop football as the sport par excellence at Harvard.

Baron Karl Ferdinand von Plat, the noted Austrian painter, has returned to his native Vienna from Hollywood where he has been doing notable of the screen in water color. The baron is especially famous for his feminine portraits, but in addition to his claim, Helene Chandler, Grete Nissen, Irene Rich and Anita Loos, he has painted a number of Hollywood movie beauties in the person of Harold Lloyd. The baron just loves America, especially since light shows have become legal, but nonetheless he is very delighted to be back in Vienna.

Little Lord Vancian is once more in the news. He is Francis Hodgson, the son of Frances Hodgson, who wrote the famous sketch of the perfect little gentleman. His mother took Vivian as her model, but he protests that, apart from the curls he was not a perfect little gentleman, and used to get himself just as dirty as the rest of the neighborhood.

brother boys. He is not a true lance writer and because the fact that he cannot even, though he writes stuff like Hemingway, live down the fact that he was his mother's model boy.

President Roosevelt still continues to appoint to his official cabinet positions with interesting personalities. The latest addition to his official family is the new under-secretary of the treasury, Dean Gooderham Acheson, aged 41, who was born in Connecticut but resides in Maryland. He was once secretary to Judge Brandeis and has represented Norway before the Hague Tribunal. He has a 100-acre farm near Baltimore where he rides horseback. He is a lawyer, but the distress of the law is relieved by the artists in his family. His wife, Alice, paints portraits. His brother, Edward Campbell, lives in Bermuda and writes novels.

Howard Barlow, conductor for the Columbia Broadcast System, finds commuting between home and country an excellent aid to musical memory. As he goes from his country estate at Poundridge to New York city, he does not read the newspaper, but musical scores. This is one of the ways he has acquired the immense musical erudition which makes it possible for him to weave melodies from 20 to 30 different composers into the musical setting of a half-hour program.

CHAPTER I

BARRETT COLVIN, bronzed by sun-baked miles of sand, sat forward so that he might see the windows of Fifth Avenue. It was a bit earlier than mid-afternoon but many windows were warm with the yellow glow that is a glare by night. The skies were sullenly low and there was a drizzle in the chilly air. The English, Barrett reflected, would call it "a dirty day." To the average New Yorker, it was "rotten weather." These folks upon whom he had recently turned his broad back would not call it "the will of Allah." Well, the faith of the East was the most comfortable but Barrett didn't share it.

He moved uneasily and lit a cigarette. It was always unsatisfactory to come back. Memories that seared his mind would leap from embers. A corner of an untown street or an old building would brush away 10 years to make him see Marcia, his tempestuous little sister, the daughter of his father's second wife, Marcia, violent in her trap, Marcia crying, "Barry, you must help me! I've no one else!"

He had intended to help her, but with the passing of years he had been less and less certain about what he had done by putting himself between her and the storm. He had made it easy, without meaning to, for her to evade her responsibility and to live a life.

And now Marcia was married. She had written Barrett, "Of course Dick doesn't know." And here, from her evasion, was another problem and one of the oldest ones—a problem discussed often in "Advice to the Lovelorn" columns in answer to letters usually beginning, "Shall I tell the man I am going to marry, etc." Almost always the description of the unfortunate affair ended with a wistful, "I was so young."

BARRETT COLVIN tossed his half-smoked cigarette from the lowered taxicab window to lean back, already weary of civilization which is not always so ordered as it seems.

He hoped Dick Radnor deserved the devotion he had won from Marcia. The facts might so easily come out in time, Barrett reflected, and unless Dick were the man Marcia thought him to be there would be the devil to pay.

He must go up to see the boy, Marcia's boy, Barrett decided, as soon as he could manage to get away from town. Marcia did not care for him as she should and it was fair to the youngster. He must have grown a good deal, Barrett reflected. It was four years—a broad four years—since he had seen the child whom Marcia had implored him to "adopt" and whom he had adopted.

Barrett Colvin felt a little tingle when the taxicab turned into a sedate old street where brown-stone-fronted houses told of other times and other manners. This was getting home. No matter how far one wandered or how insistent the call of distant countries, for every man some one house or some one woman meant "home."

The door was opened as the taxicab came to a sudden halt. Higgins, the butler, appeared, obviously excited to have "Mr. Barrett" home again. The chauffeur swung several scurried, bulging bags from the car to the walk. Higgins' eyes were fixed upon his master, his voice almost tremulous.

In a window across the street Barrett saw the imperious head of Miss Ella Sexton, saw her nod stiffly and wave a handkerchief so black-bordered as to suggest a death of yesterday.

Barrett, after bowing deeply, went up the brown stone steps of his home. So little was changed. The glimpse of Miss Ella, the characteristic tilt of her aristocratic nose, told him that she still ruled sternly and coldly over all those who waited her door.

At the door, which Higgins held open, Barrett turned again as he did to see a little girl hurrying up the steps of Miss Ella's house. A pretty picture she made with her young grace and energy.

"One of the Thorpes?" he asked Higgins.

"No, Mr. Barrett. That is Miss Elinor Stafford. She's grown a deal these four years, sir."

Barrett nodded. His smile widened. He remembered Elinor Stafford dimly as a gawky youngster with a brace on her teeth, a youngster with an especial talent for stumbling. He had met her at Miss Ella's house—the golden shrine for all those relatives who felt they should be remembered in the Sexton will.

The hall and Higgins shutting the world away with a closed door. How good it was to be home! The same dined, lovely tapestry, the same ancient hat rack that Barrett kept because, looking at it, he could sometimes fancy he saw his father's hat on the black marble surface, his mother's small gloves and card case.

"It's good to be here again, Higgins."

"And it's good to have you, sir!"

Barrett saw that Higgins' eyes held tears and he laid a strong hand on the old man's arm. With a gentleness that, combined with his strength, beckoned too many weak mortals his way, Barrett asked, "I hope you've been well, Higgins?"

"Yes, Mr. Barrett. Now and again a bit lonely—not that I mean to complain, sir! I think you'll find everything as you want it, Mr. Barrett."

"I'm certain everything's in fine shape."

The harbor was foggy, I presume, sir? Higgins asked as he took Barrett's coat, weighted by the wet in the day's air.

"Pretty thick—"

"Quite four hours late, you are, sir; I've been watching by the window."

"Lucky to get in, at all."

"I presume so, you've lunched, sir?"

"Yes; thought I'd better. By the by, are there any letters?"

"A number, sir. On your desk—"

A FEW minutes later when Barrett was poking through his mail—frankly and naively surprised at its bulk—Marcia came hurrying in. "Darling!" she called from the doorway of the big, dark room. He turned, rose and she was in his arms, crying, laughing, clinging to him.

BARRETT COLVIN

ELINOR STAFFORD

"The same huge thing," she exclaimed breathlessly, standing away, "and so famous, dear! You don't know what you're in for! I haven't been to a dinner this winter that someone hasn't said, 'So Barrett Colvin is your brother? How remarkable!' I don't suppose I do look as though I could possibly be related to anyone so brainy. Oh, it is good to see you, dear!"

She pressed close again and for a moment hid her face against the top button of his waistcoat. Then she drew away and raised her face to let him see her smile and her misty eyes.

"I'm so frightfully happy," she admitted. "Dick's such a perfect husband! And to think you haven't even met him! Darling—may I have a cocktail?"

Barrett rang for Higgins at the same time studying Marcia. She had grown lean, hungry-looking, nervous. He hadn't remembered those sudden, angular mannerisms. "You're pretty stringy, Marcia," he said perplexedly.

"Darling, everyone is! You'll notice it. May I have a cigarette? Thank you so much. I've been tearing all day. Always so much to do—"

She dropped to a chair as Higgins appeared at the doorway. "Good afternoon, Higgins. Will you bring me a Manhattan?"

Higgins murmured greeting, bowed and departed. Marcia sat forward on her chair.

"I want to talk to you about a lot of things, Barrett. Are you too frightfully tired?"

"Not at all," he answered and tried valiantly to stifle the conviction that she would have gone on, no matter what his answer.

"Well, in the first place," she began, and then paused. She drew a deep, untidy breath, sat forward and continued, "I've been—uncomfortable lately about—what happened before you went away. It's bothered me more than ever before. More even than when I realized—"

Again she paused. Barrett's eyes grew sympathetic. He knew what it must cost her to say all this.

Marcia went on again. "When I realized," she repeated, mistaking her full, scarlet-lipped lips, "about—Len Moore—what a fool I'd been—everything!"

BARRETT glanced at the hand holding her cigarette, noticed how it shook and glanced quickly away. "Poor child!" he thought. "Poor child!" The pain of others always aroused in him a blend of fierceness, tenderness and strength.

Marcia drew another deep breath before going on with her story. "Dick's extremely conservative. All his life his father went to his office at exactly 9 each morning and left it at the stroke of 4. He never varied. And Dick's mother still feels that no 'lady' appears on the streets before 6 in the evening with a bare throat. She wears those funny little beaded net collars. Dick adores her and—oh, I know it all sounds terribly mixed up! She sagged back for a second. "I can't seem to tell the story but—they're that way, all of them, about everything! Never getting away from the path of what they're supposed to do. I wish I could make you understand!"

"I think I follow better than you suppose," Barrett put in gently.

"I hope so, Barrett. I'm so terribly alone!"

It was Marcia's old cry, always voiced while someone else shouldered her burdens. "You see," she went on, "for a man, Dick has lived with such decency. He's absolutely fine! I was completely innocent and inexperienced when we were married. Oh, Barrett, if he knew the truth he'd never get over it! Never! I'm afraid to risk it. I—I can't live without Dick now."

Her eyes blurred. Barrett saw her lips tremble. "But what is it that's set you to thinking about all this?" he asked, leaning toward her.

"Well, partly it's seeing so much of Dick's family and finding out how they feel about things. The Radnors are so truthful it's almost a trial to dine with them. The other day Dick found a new servant had lied and—he dismissed her!"

"He didn't love her," Barrett pointed out, smiling a little.

"No, but could he love anyone who lied?" Marcia questioned, a break in her voice. She went on quickly without waiting for an answer. "But that's only part of it. In January I'm going to have a child!"

"My dear," Barrett leaned forward to lay a hand upon hers. "I'm so happy for you!"

She smiled and for a moment the smile dispelled the somberness that could so easily eclipse her dark, Spanish beauty. Her hand turned beneath his to grip his fingers.

"Thanks, Barry. Sweet of you. But what I wanted to say—Dick's my child—must not be—thrust upon you."

"How?" he asked, perplexed. "I don't follow you."

"Well, Mr. Dexter brought the boy to town the other day," she stated.

"But I don't seem—"

"He brought him to see me. He presented himself—and the child—in the most assured manner. Deight was in a terror for fear he'd stay until Dick came. Immediately let him in. Mr. Dexter said he thought I would want to see my brother's ward. There was something in the way he said it, Barry."

"I'll attend to that," Barrett promised angrily. "What happened?"

"Well, he said your check for his salary had been delayed and that he needed the money."

"He lied. Did you give him anything?"

"Yes. All I had at the moment. I think a little over $200—"

"That was very foolish, dear," Barrett commented levelly. He stared, frowning, at a rug at his feet. "I was in terror for fear he'd stay until Dick came. There's a strong family resemblance about the boy. He looks so much like you, Barrett. He's going to be tall and lean and strong and he has the same square chin. Anyone seeing him would notice it. They couldn't fail to. I want you to get him out of the country—"

She leaned toward her half-brother. "Barry—won't help me?" she asked, weakly. "There's no one else to whom I can turn. No one else!"

Barrett rose to his feet to pace the room. He was aware of Higgins entering, carrying a shaker and tallstemmed glass on a tray, of Higgins mending the fire and tip-toeing away. Marcia, a small, smouldering, dark beauty, sagged back in the chair, she made seem large. She sipped her cocktail, set it down on a nearby table, and the click of glass meeting mahogany was loud in the heavy stillness.

At last Barrett spoke. "I can't promise you anything," he said almost harshly. "I'll have to see what is best for the boy."

"Barry, you're not going to be unreasonable about this?" she asked pleadingly.

He smiled a little mirthlessly. Anyone who dared to oppose Marcia was invariably "unreasonable." But, poor child, that was not her fault. She had been pumped, petted, indulged absurdly, and that fact had made her tragedy.

"I must do what I feel to be fair to the boy," Barrett repeated, "and I'll start by firing Dexter." He ended grimly. "If people see him and hear he's your adopted son they'll think he's—more than adopted," Marcia pointed out. "He looks—so like you now!"

"I know that," Barrett agreed. "I've always known it. We have strong characteristics as a family. But I'm not worrying about that, Marcia. I want to be certain to do the thing that is best for you, for him, for everyone."

"Oh," she murmured miserably. For a second she closed her eyes. Opening them, she glanced at a small, jeweled watch that ticked against her wrist. She rose quickly and Barrett rose. "I must be off," she said in almost her natural way. "We've a dinner engagement. And, dear, when you are coming to see us? Not that I quite know when we're free, but I'll look it up and let you know. Will you come to dinner?"

"Of course."

"We haven't time now to settle anything but I know you'll come to my view point. You'll realize it's the only one."

"We'll see. I'm only trying to be fair."

"You won't be fair to me if you keep me in terror," she contested hotly.

"I think we'd better not discuss now, dear," he said firmly. She raised her slender shoulders. Her chin went high. Without a word she turned toward the hall.

FROWNING, he followed her unhappily. He saw her pick up a pair of gloves from the table, watched her pull them on with two sharp snaps. He heard Marcia's angry going to leave him alone. He had looked forward eagerly to seeing her, his small half-sister and only relative. Stiffing a sigh, he stared down at her, so small, so seemingly frail but capable, he knew, of bitterness and actually wrought plans of revenge.

"She raised her heavy eyelids for a moment to give him an incident, dull glance. Then she melted, to cling to him sobbing and laughing."

"I am a beast, Barry! But—what must help me?"

"I do want to help you, dear," he assured her. He patted her shoulder reassuredly.

"Will you? (she mopped her dark eyes) 'Come and have a long talk with me—soon?'"

"Whenever you have a free moment, telephone and I'll come running," he promised.

"Barry, you are sweet!" she broke out, and to his embarrassment, kissed his big, tanned hand. She had always been so extravagant in showing love as hate, Barrett wished he had not had to remember that fact.

He held her mink coat a moment later. "I worry too, Barry," she was saying, "because the boy looks so much like you. People who hear that he's your ward will think, you know—that he is your son, hidden to save—shame—"

Marcia's back was toward him. Barrett realized she was hoping by repeating this suggestion to frighten him into exiling her son, small Gerald Moore. She should have known him better than that!

"As I said before, Marcia," he pointed out slowly, "I realize that possibility when I adopted him. As a family we are rather promiscuous type. But my own peace and comfort would never let me hide him."

"Oh, well—," she hung out petulantly. He followed her down the steps, tucking a sleek rag around her knees as the chauffeur waited instructions. Standing at the open door Barrett felt the heat reaching toward him from the car in which orchids combined in their silver—"

Vanity case, mirror, cushions, foot rest, cigarette, lighters—all were within the car and the windows were firmly closed to keep out any chill, Barrett thought. "Unnatural just as I have."

Marcia interrupted his thoughts. "Dick is longing to meet you. You will come soon?" she asked.

"Any evening you name."

She glanced idly across the street, turned quickly to the chauffeur. "Jensen," she said imperiously, "please take me to the street to ask Miss Stafford if I may drive her home!"

BARRETT felt his heart beat. Coming down the steps of the house opposite was the girl he had seen before. The girl who had been "little Miss Stafford" and an ugly duckling. She was beautiful now, he saw, as she crossed the windy street, followed by the stately deferential Jensen.

"I'll wager you don't remember me!" he said as she neared the curb.

"Oh, but I do!" the girl contradicted shyly yet with a flush that he did not understand. The grip of her small hand was strong and honest. Her deep violet eyes met his levelly. Barrett felt himself within himself a glow of an almost forgotten warmth.

"It was so kind of you, Mrs. Radnor, to offer—" the girl began.

Marcia cut her short. "Hop in, child!" she said. "I'm late now. I meet Dick down town every day to ride home with him. Isn't that incurably romantic?"

"I think it is," said Elinor. Barrett laughed; a laugh prompted by pleasure. It was one's joy as he would like her to think "Nice."

"Aunt Ella wants to see you, Mr. Colvin," said Elinor Stafford.

"I'll go to see her very soon," he replied, "but—you used to call me 'Barry' and I resent the change. A man should hang around to keep the home fires burning."

She smiled at him. Marcia, consulting her small watch again, murmured something about having to hurry on. The door of the car was closed, a moment later the motor started and Barrett watched them disappear.

Elinor Stafford, he decided, was the sort of youngster one needed to meet on a day when the air was weighted by chill mist and one's temples were throbbing gray. She was so different from Marcia with her keen sense for finding light corners and for dragging everyone near her into those corners too. Poor passionate, impulsive, blind and self-centered child! Well, this time he would think first of the boy who deserved first thought. After all, he and Marcia, though comparatively young, had not the years ahead of them that the child had. Marcia's child, his ward, Gerald Moore.

The house seemed strangely empty as he returned to it, rather dismal and, in spite of a comfortable temperature, a little cold.

For some reason he did not clearly understand, a vision of Elinor Stafford's face remained before him. He wondered when he would see her again.

CHAPTER II

BARRETT COLVIN turned impatiently to his desk. It was ridiculous of him to keep thinking of the girl. In an effort to put her out of his mind he opened and scanned a letter or two.

A few years ago he had thought that if the small group who understood his work felt it was good his ambition would be realized. Now here he was—reading all these words of praise and instead of feeling pleased he was wondering what it would be like to take a girl of Elinor Stafford's sort to dinner or to the theatre.

He poked his lips into pigeon holes, decided to get rid of Dexter promptly and as soon as he could to make a trip to the Connecticut farm where his ward lived.

Probably, Barrett reflected, he would have such a girl as Elinor Stafford. He had always despised middle-aged men who devoted themselves to young girls. Why the devil was he giving the matter so much thought, anyhow? There wasn't a chance in a hundred of his taking this particular girl anywhere. Of course he might happen to meet her at Miss Ella's.

He pushed aside the letter he was reading, disgusted with himself. He wrote his age, 35, on the desk blotter. Elinor Stafford was 19 or 20 he judged. Of course she would marry some youngster, some youth in her own set. She would have a home, children, all that she should have. Lord but the house seemed quiet!

She had such gentle eyes. She would be very sweet with children.

Barrett rose suddenly, wishing he were back in the desert, wrangling with some native who would not have sacred ground disturbed—for the price offered. Dreaming of a bathtub and brushing the sands of time from the skin of a dinosaur. That he wasn't in the desert and, until things cleared up in the question of Gerald's future, settled and Marcia's baby born, he would not go on any expedition, no matter how tempting.

Junior Ball Clubs To Hold Work Out
Jack Bartley's Safeway Ball Club will hold their first training session at the High School grounds at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday evening.

"Duke" McGee's Young Liberals will go through their plays at the High School grounds at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday.

TURKEYS LIE EMBRO
Domestic turkey prices largely are based on the quality of their wild ancestors, and they are given as much importance as their wild ancestors, such as ranging over unimproved lands in search of food and rooting in whatever sheltered tree or bush they may select. There will be a minimum mortality.

Because imported turkeys were being imported into Canada from the United States under conditions prejudicial to the interests of Canadian producers, an order-in-council directs the application of dumping duties.

Atlantic Team In Lead of Swimmers
BUFFALO, June 14.—The Atlantic team was leading its season rival by a lap in the Eight-day marathon swim at Green Lake tonight. Buffalo was second and the mid-west and Canadian teams were tied in third place. New York was fifth and the Pacific team last and hopelessly out of the contest.

Between 8:30 p.m. Sunday and 8 o'clock Tuesday night the lead-dogs teams had covered approximately 100 miles.

Parked Auto Is Not Always Safe, He Finds

WINNIPEG, June 14.—A parked automobile is not always safe. Louis Baker had several fractured ribs today after an unusual accident. Seated in his car, Baker was struck by a piece of cast iron hurled from a nearby junk yard, a distance of 180 feet. Old scrap iron was being pounded by a 400-pound iron ball in the yard. One piece was struck on the side, and fitted with great speed into Louis' car.

Noted Editor Who Never Wrote Line Of Copy Is Dead

W. B. Townsend, Publisher for 40 Years, Sets His Last Story
DAILYNORWA, Ga., June 14.—W. B. Townsend, who never wrote a line of copy but edited and published a newspaper, singlehandedly, for more than 40 years, died Tuesday in the printshop of his Dailynorwa Nugget.

The 78-year-old survivor of the past era of personal journalism, he had set millions of lines of type, composing as he picked out the letters, and the little hand-press where he turned out papers that circulated over the United States. He didn't get up.

The editor is dead, was the last news story he ever "wrote." The single line was the last item in a column of local news in this week's "Nugget."

A printer's devil here in the days when Dailynorwa was a booming gold mine town with a government mine. Townsend wanted to be a publisher. He had not much education and little money, but he set him

HINDU EXTORTION CULT IS PROBED

FRESNO, Cal., June 14.—Rampant extortion of a Hindu cult which investigating officers said has dealt in wholesale murder and extortion has stretched to Fresno in an investigation of the slaying last night of Shri Singh Singh and a woman companion near Holtville, Imperial County.

District Attorney Glenn M. Doyle said up to 18 days ago the city was the frequent hiding place of Shri Singh Singh, whose body was found beside that of Amelia Valdez, in a rooming house operated by her mother.

Two weeks ago the Hindu sought protection from the cult. The Vorn said he was given a guard while in the city.

GUM CUSHIONS
An Extra Value
Gutta Percha and Roadcraft Tires have cushions of pure gum rubber moulded in between the plies of wall fabric, making a "bearing" cushion which resists friction and wear at these points as effectively as ball bearings do in machinery.

GUARANTEE
Roadcraft and Gutta Percha Tires come with a guarantee, for 12 months from date of purchase for passenger car service. After 12 months, the guarantee is for 6 months. In all cases, the guarantee is for 6 months. In all cases, the guarantee is for 6 months.

THE GUTTA PERCHA TIRE
In the Gutta Percha Tire, shown at the top above, only the inner quality of cord fabric is used. Each strand is impregnated and encased with rubber to prevent cord chafing and to give extra mileage and extra safety. The chafing and to give extra mileage and extra safety. The chafing and to give extra mileage and extra safety.

THE ROADCRAFT TIRE
For those who want a lower-priced tire, the ROADCRAFT, made by Gutta Percha, gives exceptional value. It is made of quality cord fabric, each strand impregnated and encased with rubber, and has the famous Gum Cushion construction to give it extra protection from road shocks.
